What is a Rent-to- Own Agreement?

Many people who sign rent-to-own agreements or land contracts end up evicted, not homeowners. Rent-to-own agreements and land contracts are promises to buy/sell property or a mobile home over time. However, sellers often try to evict buyers during the agreement. As a result, many buyers do not end up actually owning the home, even when they have made payments for years.

Rent-to-own agreements and land contracts are different from ordinary rental or home ownership. The characteristics of traditional rental and home ownership are:

Tenant

Ownership

Rent to own agreements and land contracts often have some terms that look like a rental contract and other terms that look like a purchase contract. This arrangement can give both parties some flexibility in the terms of their agreement. However, because the agreements are usually written by sellers, the choice of terms often strongly favors landlord-sellers.

Common Rent-to-Own Agreement Terms:

- Buyer takes property "as is" and is responsible for repairs/upkeep
- Buyer is responsible for property taxes
- Down payment towards the purchase price
- No improvements or changes without the seller's permission

- If payments missed or contract violated, landlord-seller can evict and keep your money

Some of these terms may be unlawful. A person who is buying a house generally cannot be evicted in the same manner as a tenant. A tenant who is renting a home is not responsible for making repairs. If a seller is trying to evict you, you should contact an attorney right away.

Many people who sign rent to own agreements end up evicted and lose all the money they put into the home!

A rent-to-own or land contract may seem like a good choice if you want to buy a home right now but need a little time to save for a down payment or build up your credit rating. But at LawNY®, we have noticed that some landlords “sell” the same home over and over again.

Buyers sign a rent-to-own agreement or land contract, move in, and fix up the home. After six months or so, the landlord-seller finds a reason to evict the buyer and keeps all of their money and their improvements. Then the seller gets someone new to sign a rent-to-own agreement.

You have special rights if you are in a rent-to-own agreement with a manufactured home park.

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

BEFORE YOU SIGN: Read the rent-to-own agreement and think about getting a lawyer to read it.

In reading the rent-to-own agreement, make sure that you understand:

- who will be responsible for repairs, taxes, and insurance

- how your payments are being used (For example, whether your monthly payment is fully or only partially being applied to the purchase price of the house)
- what the agreement says about missing or late payments or other violations of the contract (For example, will you be evicted? What does the contract say about the return of your down payment and any payments you've already made?)

Make sure you agree with all terms in the contract. Every part of your agreement should be in writing. If you are thinking about signing a rent-to-own agreement or a land contract, and have questions about it, you can call your local LawNY® office.

BEFORE YOU SIGN: Talk to a HUD-certified housing counselor about alternatives.

Many people sign rent-to-own agreements because they have bad credit, don't want to deal with banks, don't have a large down payment saved, or think that it is the only option to own a home. There are many programs available to help first-time homebuyers and low-income people transition from renting to homeownership without signing rent-to-own agreements or land contracts. A HUD-certified housing counselor can meet with you and talk to you about credit issues and homeownership programs that you may be eligible for. To contact a HUD-certified housing counselor near you, call (800) 569-4287. HUD-Certified housing counselors are permitted to charge "reasonable and customary" fees for their counseling services, but must provide counseling free of charge to anyone who demonstrates that they cannot afford the fees.

AFTER YOU SIGN: If you are having issues with a rent-to-own contract, contact an attorney.

If you are having issues with an agreement, or have received a notice from your seller or court papers regarding a rent-to-own, you can call your local legal aid office. You should not ignore notices or court papers, as the time deadlines for protecting your rights in such a situation may be very short.

MAKE A COMPLAINT: Contact one of the agencies below to make a complaint.

If you have concerns about a rent-to-own agreement or land contract, you can make a complaint to the New York Attorney General's Office Consumer Frauds Bureau. For more information, see <http://www.ag.ny.gov/consumer-frauds/Filing-a-Consumer-Complaint>. You can contact the regional offices at:
